The Peter and Paul Seminar was established as a response to the Groupe des Dombes' publication Pour La Conversion des Églises, which calls the Churches to a conversion. The Peter and Paul Seminar intends to investigate the implications of such a conversion at the level of institutions. It considers the question: Which institutions in the Roman Catholic Church can be modified and how is this possible so as to foster the unity of the Church of Christ while reflecting the faith of the Catholic Church? This interdisciplinary research project gathers historians, systematic theologians and canon lawyers. Participants are internationally recognized scholars in their own field of expertise. Most take part in national or international ecumenical dialogues. Previous papers can be found in The Jurist 59/2 (1999) and 64/1-2 (2004).
