BOOK LAUNCH : PRACTICING INTERDISCIPLINARITY A BOTTOM-UP APPROACH

In interdisciplinary projects and research networks, the members are faced with multiple demands. They are to both advance scientific programs and produce publications, creating visibility for researchers and research alike, bringing (international) experts into dialogue with those involved in the project and thus generate innovative impulses and new ways of thinking while at the same time broadening the scope for self-chosen topics.

The research project IGS “Resonant Self-World Relations in Ancient and Modern Socio-Religious Practices” was faced with these challenges from the beginning, seeking to integrate people and projects from a wide range of disciplines, methods, and time periods. In order to share experiences and challenges of interdisciplinary research a milestone publication of novel format presents now results and reflections on the way interdisciplinarity is done and how it advances innovative research questions.
