

It is commonly known that the philosopher and jurist Johann Gottlieb Heineccius (1681 – 1741) was a figure of European significance not only in his own time but well into the 19th century. However, his many-sided and widely published work as well as his teaching in Halle, Franeker, Frankfurt/Oder and Halle again remains seriously under-explored, even though there are some notable specialist studies. The 2016 conference of the research network Natural Law 1625-1850 is devoted to a closer investigation of Heineccius. Focus of the discussion is his main natural-law work Elementa iuris naturae et gentium with its classical themes: the state of nature, property, domestic and political authority, theories of duty and of action, the concepts of happiness and of love. These themes will be contextualised in three dimensions. First, there are the relations internal to Heineccius's work as a whole, namely his considerable contributions to Roman and German jurisprudence and his purely philosophical works. Secondly, a number of contributions are concerned with his well-known predecessors, especially Grotius, Pufendorf and Leibniz; and thirdly, papers are devoted to Heineccius' reception from Scotland to Spain, from Russia to Brazil. The conference will thus give a broad picture of the theory and application of natural law after Pufendorf, before Kant and alongside Wolff.
